VIRTUAL FORUM

Building Civil Campus Conversations

Higher education has a longstanding history of balancing free speech and academic freedom with inclusion. This practice allows students to express themselves and engage in challenging conversations. When it comes to controversial and heated topics, however, how can colleges and universities promote a campus community?

Recent campus incidents regarding the Israel-Hamas war over the last several months highlight this concern. In the upcoming Virtual Forum, Ian Wilhelm, deputy managing editor, and a panel of experts will weigh in on how to de-escalate conflict and ensure students feel a sense of belonging. 5 MAR 0

Cell Phone Myths

If your phone gets wet, don't put it in rice. Instead, tap your iPhone against your hand with the connector facing down to let the liquid drip out, then leave it in a dry area, Apple said in a new post. The company warned that small particles of rice can damage your phone.

Closing your phone's background apps does nothing to conserve battery life. In fact, closing them may use more battery than leaving them open, and Apple recommends you only close an app if it's unresponsive.
