Final Title IX rule enshrines protections for LGBTQI+ students.

The new regulations:

- Require that schools assume an accused student is innocent at the outset of an investigation.
- Give schools the ability to offer an informal resolution process, except in cases of student allegations against employees.
- Require schools to provide breastfeeding rooms for students and employees.
- Protect students and employees with medical conditions related to, or who are recovering from, termination of pregnancy.
- Revive the single-investigator model, which allows an individual to serve as both the case decision-maker and Title IX investigator.
- Provide more discretion to schools and colleges to tailor Title IX policies based on their size, age of students, and administrative structures.
- Make questioning at live hearings optional for colleges and universities.
- Have institutions largely rely on the “preponderance of the evidence” standard often used in civil lawsuits, making optional the “clear and

TITLE XX

The word 'TITLE' is written in a large, blue, serif font. Below it, the Roman numeral 'XX' is also in a large, blue, serif font. A stylized icon of a pair of scales of justice is positioned between the 'T' of 'TITLE' and the 'X' of 'XX'.

The final rule is expected to be published in the Federal Register later this month, after which schools and colleges will have until Aug. 1 to implement it. The timeline mirrors the about three months that DeVos provided to districts for implementation back in 2020.

The Education Department's long-awaited regulations also provide protections for pregnant students and employees.
